
CATS ILLUSTRATED

School is starting again for kittens!

Right now, school is starting again for cats! Winter break is a nice four-week break, but now it is over and kittens are going back to school. However, the end of this break has left many kittens feeling grumpy, a mood that does not go well with school.

Image above - Juliet, who's glad that she won't have her kittens around for the whole day now.

In school, many kittens have acted out a bit by yawning, feigning boredom, and trying to doze off in class. Teachers are not happy, and a record of five kittens in home room were given detention after school. However, kittens are still acting out, and teachers are finding it hard to do their job. Teachers will be calling many kittens' parents, to report bad behavior in school. But right now, kittens only care about one part in the day. Dismissal from school.

Even adult cats are feeling tired and annoyed that winter break is over. Stripy spoke harshly to a peacemaking client, which sent the client out of the room in tears. Rudy and Judy were feeling too bad for themselves to bother each other, which is saying something. Lunch burned some fries at her Luncheon, her thoughts on the winter break that has just passed. Lunch's Luncheon was open for half of the winter break, but the other half Lunch either wasn't working or her Luncheon was closed. Even Harvey didn't feel like giving a therapy session today, so he just left a box of sugar cubes in his office with a note to say that he was out of town for the next few days.

Right now, all cats are looking forward to the weekend. Two days of no school, no work, video games, and the great feeling of having nothing you have to do. Some cats are even thinking about spring break, another week off from school. But spring break is in April, which is very far away. However, you can always call in sick to work, or fake a doctor's note at school to get a day of relaxing. Doing that can also get you fired from your job, or you could earn yourself a suspension at school.

Image above - Juliet, who figured she wouldn't get in trouble for being an hour late to work.

“When I was a kitten, the best deals on sugar cubes happened at 10:00 A.M. — I was always there for them.”

- HARVEY, WHO DOESN'T NEED TO GIVE KITTENS ANY IDEAS

Cats are not feeling good right now as work and school have started. However, bosses and teachers also feel the same way. But you can't just skip a day of school or work, so everything continued like normal. But kittens have been thinking about a hypothetical situation where there was a flu outbreak — the school would have to shut down, wouldn't it? That'd be a three or four day break for all of the kittens who weren't sick. But sick kittens wouldn't really mind, because it's more fun when you can boast that you shut the school down.

Subscribe again for more on skipping school!