
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Cats have discovered flavored chips!

As a new convenience store has opened up in Pawsville, cats have been exposed to exotic new products, such as flavored chips. When cats saw the first bag of “barbecue chips” in the convenience store, there was a race to buy a bag. Cats also spotted other chip flavors such as sour cream and onion, and fifty-percent less salt potato chips.

Image above - Lunch, who thought chips were always plain.

Back at home, lucky cats who had managed to buy a bag of chips were faced with the tough dilemma of eating their loot, or saving them until there was a shortage and then auctioning them off. But no bag of chips was the same. Lunch ended up with a bag of sour cream and onion potato chips.

Rudy looked at her paws to find a bag of barbecue chips, and Harvey has been looking at his very interesting bag of fifty-percent less salt potato chips. All of these are completely new flavors to cats, and at this moment cats are testing out these new forms of snacks with glee.

Stripy and Blackspots did not get any bags of flavored potato chips, as they are busy packing for camping. However, Rudy gave both Stripy and Blackspots a barbecue chip, to show them how good flavored chips could be. But not all cats have the same taste, and Blackspots choked down his chip and Stripy spat hers out when Rudy wasn't looking. But Rudy wasn't the only one to like their bag of chips. Lunch discovered how good sour cream and onion chips could be, and Harvey realized how unpleasantly salty regular potato chips were when he bit into a fifty-percent less salt potato chip.

The convenience store has been the talk of many cats in Pawsville, and cats are waiting hungrily for a restock. However, some cats chose to save their chips for when there was a shortage, and right now cats like Naya are pulling out their bags of chips and are putting them on the market for thirty dollars a piece. But cats are too excited to care, and soon the chips were auctioned off at high prices.

Lunch bid one hundred dollars for a bag of sour cream and onion chips. Rudy knocked Judy out and looked at the auctioneer viciously, prompting them to give her a bag of barbecue chips. Harvey got a bag of fifty-percent less salt chips for free because no other cat liked them.

Right now, cats are discovering the wonders of flavored chips, but that certain convenience store has other cool products as well, like exotically flavored soda and cotton candy in a bowl. But cats haven't gotten to those goodies yet, even though they will soon.

Subscribe again for more on exotic snacks!

Image above - Judy, who's going to steal Rudy's bag of barbecue chips.

“Did I see a fifty-percent less chemicals Twinkie in the convenience store?”

- LUNCH

though they will soon.