
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Sugar fries are out of stock at Lunch's Luncheon!

Because of supply chain issues, Lunch's Luncheon is out of stock of sugar fries. To be more specific, the fries were the things missing. There was definitely enough sugar to go around.

Image above - Harvey, who's suffering from withdrawal.

Harvey is hit the hardest by this shocking news, and he has been suffering from withdrawal. Harvey is used to two or three orders of sugar fries a day, but today, he had zero. Lunch has been calling the warehouse where she gets her restocks from, but no one answers. We have heard that the warehouse had a bad fire, and they wouldn't be able to deliver any more shipments for a while. This is extra bad, because most restaurants, grocery stores, and convenience stores get their restocks from that warehouse. Even the new convenience store that sells flavored chips gets everything from that warehouse. However, places like the grocery store get their restocks from somewhere else, so cats won't need to ransack the shelves.

Lunch's Luncheon should have gotten a restock yesterday, and they are running out of food. Lunch has made some quick decisions, and she is temporarily closing her Luncheon and giving her employees some paid time off until another restock comes. This day is the last day that Lunch's Luncheon will be open for a while, so many cats have come in to order what they can. But Lunch's Luncheon isn't the only restaurant that is deeply affected by this. The Wish for Fish had its last day today, and it sold out of about everything. Many kittens and adult cats ate Wish for Fish dinners, but cats like North enjoyed their last meal at Taco caT, which was also closing temporarily.

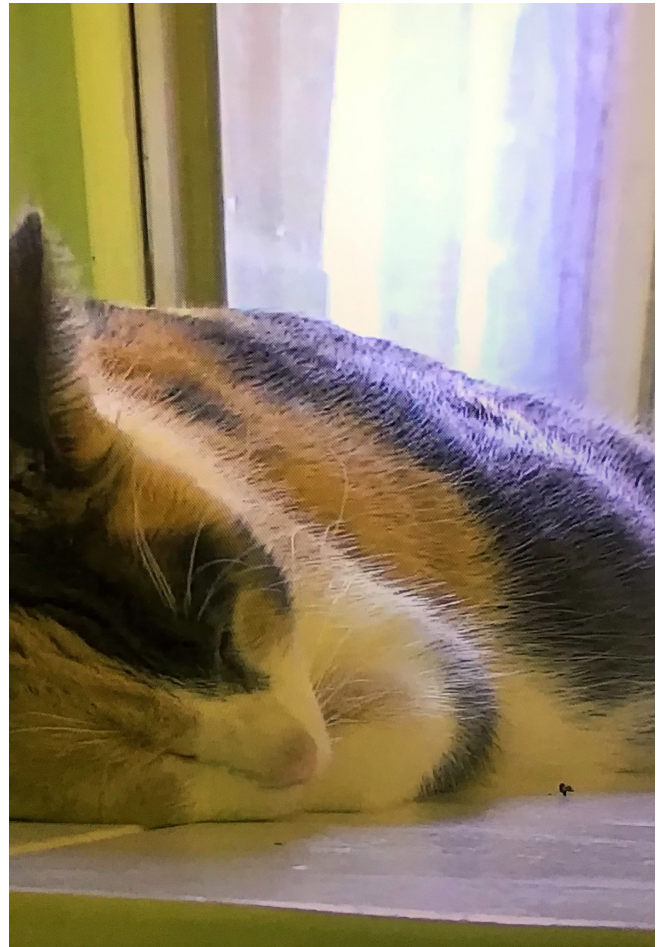

Image above - Juliet, who's going to buy a lot of frozen dinners.

Right now, cats will have to cook home cooked meals a lot more. Blackspots has resigned himself to the fate that he will be cooking for three weeks alone for himself, Rudy, and their six kittens. Judy would be in deep trouble if her kittens didn't know how to cook, but since they do, Judy is tasking each kitten to make meals for themselves, and take turns making meals for her.

“Don't buy food for us. We can survive on candy and chips!”

- MAVIS'S KITTENS

Some cats have had the bright idea to buy frozen dinners from the grocery store. However, they were soon sold out, with most families of cats getting two or three frozen items. But soon, canned soups and jars of tomato sauce were also swarmed, cats looking for ways to ease the cooking workload. Cooking pasta was easy, and then you just added the tomato sauce, which made for an easy meal. Canned soup was just soup in a can, a ready meal.

Subscribe again for more on this food shortage!