

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Cats have been getting lots of paper cuts recently!

For some strange reason, cats have been getting many more paper cuts lately. North often needs to print things out for his job, but almost every time he did, he also got a paper cut. Right now North's front paws are sore and a little bloody, and he is taking a break from work.

Image above - Harvey and North, who got five total paper cuts yesterday combined.

---

Lunch needs to fill out certain forms on paper to ensure that her Luncheon can keep running, but now she has also been at the mercy of paper cuts. Lunch has started wearing gloves when picking up paper, because she would have gotten a paper cut any other way. However, some cats have a theory of the reason behind all of these paper cuts. "I think that these paper cuts are the fault of the paper,” Rudy has expressed, “I think that this shipment of paper might have been cut particularly thin. That would make it easier for the paper to cut skin.” However, Judy disagrees strongly. “I think that the cats handling the paper are the real problems. If they knew how to hold paper correctly, none of this would be happening!” Judy’s statement has been met with grumbles, while many cats have endorsed Rudy’s idea.

Whether all these paper cuts are the fault of the paper or the fault of the cats handling the paper, paper cuts are still at large. Even cats who handle paper carefully are getting paper cuts, and it seems that the only solution is to wear gloves or avoid paper entirely. North is wearing heavy duty gloves, as he only needs to print things out. But Lunch has it harder. She has to write on each sheet of paper she uses, as she is answering questions in a form, and you can’t write with gloves on. Lunch is being very careful, but she cannot avoid paper cuts entirely. Some cats have carefully put pieces of paper from this shipment into a safe, as they want to compare this paper’s sharpness with the paper in the next shipment.

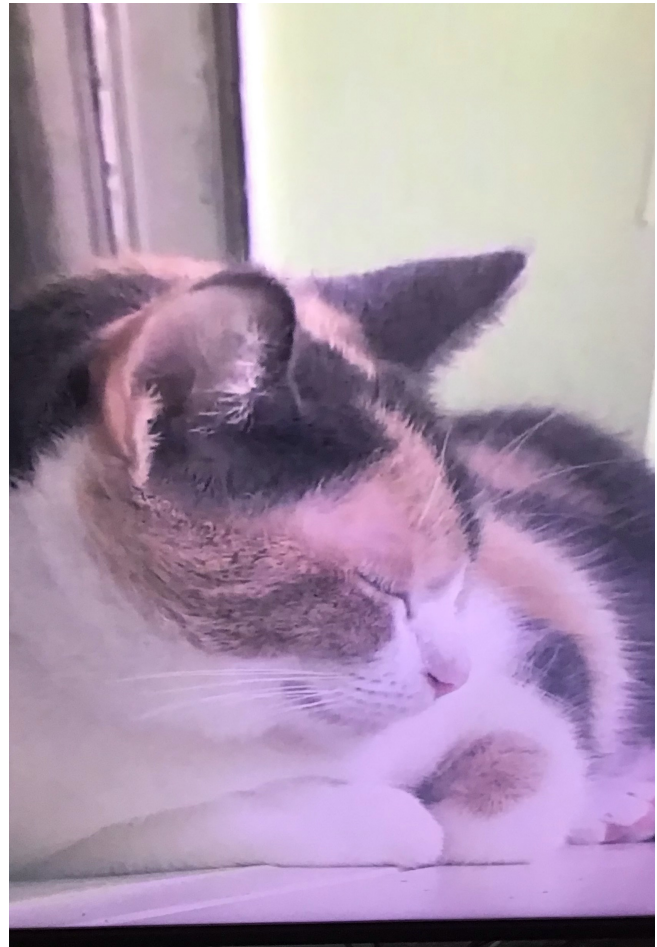

Image above - Juliet, who bet Blackpelt that she could handle paper without being cut, and then lost money.

“I gave myself a lot of paper cuts so that I would look tough!”

- RUDY JR.

Cats who can steer clear of paper are doing so right now. However, the cat who is the most injured right now is Lunch, who has paper cuts up and down her paws. Jake counted today, and found that Lunch has a total of fourteen paper cuts, some over lapping. Lunch is in great pain right now, and she is taking a break from doing forms. She is resting her bandaged paws in warm water, and letting her paper cuts heal. Right now, Lunch’s paws look like a scarred mess. We don’t want to go into any more details.

However, cats will soon find a solution to this paper cut problem, whether it is gloves, or it just involves doing everything online.

Subscribe again for more on paper cuts!