

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Cats are preparing for a potato chip eating contest!

As you may have heard in the last issue, cats have been preparing for a potato chip eating contest coming up! The qualifying round starts in three days, and cats are working hard to get ready for it. However, cats have varying opinions on how this contest might go.

Image above - Judy, who will definitely participate.

---

"I'm ready to down at least a pound of potato chips," says Lunch, "I ate a twelve ounce bag in eight minutes, and I felt like I could eat more! I'm definitely going to qualify for the main contest." Lunch is among the more confident cats, but some cats, like Juliet, are a little hesitant. "If I eat too many potato chips I could throw up," says Juliet, who doesn't like throwing up. “I’ve been practicing eating potato chips slowly but steadily. I can eat an eighteen ounce bag in fifteen minutes!”

While Lunch, Juliet, and some other cats are excited about participating, Mavis has clearly expressed her distaste for this competition. “I don’t like plain potato chips that much, and they’re way too crunchy and hard,” says Mavis, “if I had to participate, I would ask if I could eat barbecue chips instead. But all in all, I would rather participate in a cabbage eating contest.” Mavis is not alone in her dislike of plain potato chips, as Rudy feels the same way. “I used to love potato chips,” says Rudy, “but now that I’ve tried barbecue chips, regular chips just don’t taste the same. I don’t know if I want to participate in this potato chip eating contest.”

When Rudy said that, Judy took the opportunity to criticize Rudy in front of Rudy’s kittens, saying very loudly and bluntly that Rudy didn’t like potato chips. Judy didn’t need to do much more, except step back and start filming. Rudy’s kittens did the rest, leaping on their mama with cries of “for the love of potato chips” and “potato chips forever.” Judy will probably post that video on catTube, with a title somewhere along the lines of “angry kittens attack their potato chip-hating mama.”

Image above - Harvey, the grandmaster at eating lots of potato chips.

“I can eat a four ounce bag in three minutes!”

- GHOST, ONE OF RUDY’S KITTENS, WHO WANTS TO PARTICIPATE IN THIS CONTEST

Other cats may sound confident and bold, but the biggest contender from Pawsville is none other than Harvey. Along with being a professional wrestler, Harvey is also a grandmaster in competitive eating. He has placed in the top ten in national competitions, and won first place at the state fair three years ago. Harvey’s record for potato chips was eating a twenty-four ounce bag in ten minutes.

Lunch, Juliet, and all of the other cats in Pawsville know that if Harvey participates, they’ll all be fighting for second place.

Subscribe again for more on this contest!