
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Cats have discovered coffee!

Recently, cats have discovered the wonders of coffee and what it does. We are not referring to the cat, Coffee, but the drink that contains caffeine.

Image above - Harvey, who doesn't need to nap if he has coffee.

The thing that has interested cats in coffee is the new coffee store in Pawsville, Cat Coffee. This store has just opened up, and cats are always eager to try a new thing. However, the store employees looked on skeptically as cats came in, took large swigs of coffee, and burned their tongues and taste buds. The only cats who liked the bitter flavor of coffee were Harvey and North, who had both tried some instant coffee from Behavior and Co. before. However, coffee shocked many cats, and they will add sugar and let their coffee cool the next time they try it.

“I’ve had tea,” says Lunch, “but never coffee. I was ready for it to be hot, but I wasn’t ready for the bitterness. However, I’ll be willing to try coffee again sometime, maybe with some cream and sugar.” But while Lunch says that she wasn’t ready for bitterness, Rudy wasn’t ready for something else. “I knew that the coffee would be bitter,” says Rudy, “but I didn’t know that it would be burning hot. That’s why I spat my coffee out.” There are some cats who are saying that you can’t taste the coffee through the heat, but other cats are saying that you can’t taste the heat through the coffee.

However, while last time many cats just got the simple coffee, some cats are trying other things. Lunch is getting the same coffee, but with cream and sugar. Rudy is going to try out a kind of cold brew, and Judy is just going to try and get used to the heat and bitterness of plain coffee. North and Harvey, whose coffee palettes are more refined, have gone straight for peppermint mochas. They have some coffee in them, but they are mostly whipped cream and peppermint. However, a peppermint mocha is just right for both Harvey and North.

Image above - Juliet, who doesn't like the coffee from Cat Coffee, but likes the muffins.

“I like the hot chocolate from Cat Coffee the best.”

- MAVIS

Cats are still discovering the wonders of coffee, and unfortunately, a few cats have discovered the wonders of caffeine. No matter how hard he tried last night, Harvey couldn't fall asleep for two hours. Rudy was up half the night courtesy of two large cold brews late in the afternoon, and some kittens were finding falling asleep particularly hard, especially kittens whose parents were drinking a lot of coffee, and leaving it out on counters. Cats do not quite have an understanding of what caffeine actually is yet, but everything is a learning experience.

Subscribe again for more on coffee!