
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Kittens have not been doing their homework lately!

As there have been so many other things going on lately, kittens have often been neglecting their homework. Only Stripy Jr. is keeping up with her work, being an excellent student and all.

Image above - Juliet, who is appalled to hear this.

However, some kittens are up to a week or two behind on their work. Lunch's kittens just dug up a math assignment from last week, and they are working on it. Rudy's kittens are pulling out their textbooks and looking at their assignments from a few weeks ago, and Naya's kittens are paying their mama to record herself saying that her kittens' homework burned in a small fire. But while most kittens are just a week behind in their work or less, there is one kitten who has not turned in an assignment for a whole month. Wilbur Spots has been having trouble with his assignments, and when his siblings leave to play, he abandons the work to go with them. Right now, Juliet is worried that he can't keep up with the school curriculum.

Parent cats are very angry and disappointed in their kittens for not doing their homework. Rudy gave her kittens a screen ban until they were up to date on homework, which would definitely take a while. Lunch has scheduled sessions where she would help her kittens out with homework, putting them smack in the middle of the times where her kittens like to watch TV or play video games. Mavis, whose kittens are just a few days behind on homework, made them do it all in one go, and then gave them each a pat on the back and offered some cabbage ice cream, which was politely declined.

Juliet had the hardest job. Most of her kittens were about a week behind on their schoolwork, but they were catching up fairly quickly. However, Wilbur Spots was still four weeks behind on schoolwork, and Juliet had gotten several calls from the school asking about why Wilbur Spots was not turning in assignments. Both Juliet and Blackpelt have been helping Wilbur Spots with his assignments, and hopefully Wilbur Spots can make up all of the work in just a week or two.

“Math homework goes a lot faster if you use a calculator!”

- BLACKPELT JR., TRYING TO HELP OUT WILBUR SPOTS

get interested in a certain activity, and completely forget about their homework.

Subscribe again for more on homework!

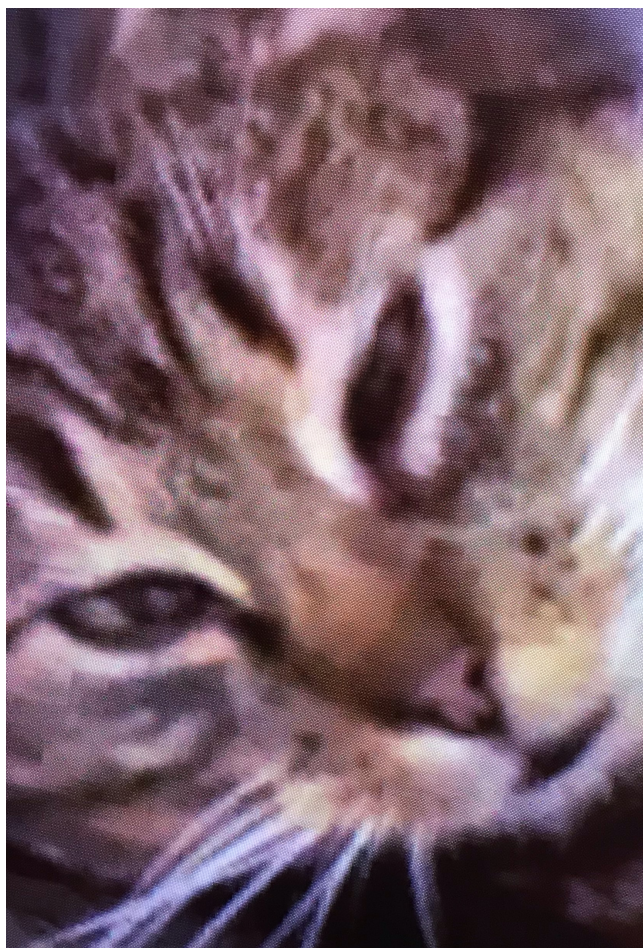

Image above - Harvey, who's happy that he doesn't have any homework to do these days.