
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Mavis is trying to build a heater!

As Mavis is the latest cat to lose heating, she has been trying to build her own heater, out of spare parts lying around her house. Mavis's kittens are locked in their room right now with a bunch of blankets, the only space heater in the house, and lots of video games, while their mama puzzles over whether a bike could generate enough energy to heat one room, at least. So far, her effort has not been fruitful, but Mavis is still trying to find a solution to this problem.

Image above - Juliet, who does not think it will work.

Just since yesterday, three more cats have lost their heating. Mavis, Juliet, and Naya's heaters must've been too strained, so they broke down.

Juliet's heater had already been acting up, so it was not a surprise that it broke down. However, Mavis and Naya had significantly newer heaters, so even Rudy with her high-tech new heater has to be careful, because who knows whose heater will break down next. Naya and her kittens are very cold right now, and Naya's two stolen space heaters aren't doing much to help.

North has finally finished his big work project, but now he has to get it to his boss at Behavior and Co. Harvey is lending North his Jeep, so North has a more all-terrain vehicle when he drives to his boss's house to drop off the work. Meanwhile, Harvey, Makenna, Reposado, and Smoke are relaxing in Harvey's heated therapy office. It has lots of beanbags, a sand pit, snacks, a bunch of backup sugar cubes, and a TV. But Harvey has to be careful. If he leaves the heat on for too long, even his super new heater will start to struggle.

Judy's heater, a generally newer heater, has been struggling a bit. Judy does not want it to break down, because then Rudy will have something to say about it. But while Judy considers turning off her heater, it brings us to another point. How has Lunch managed to keep her heater running for so long? But the real question is, has she even been running her heater? Right now, Lunch has her heater turned off, as it is only as new as Mavis's heater, which broke down. Jake and her kittens are forced to huddle together with blankets for warmth, and Lunch is not exactly popular with her kittens right now.

"I hope I never have to settle for just one pack of sugar cubes a day again!"

- HARVEY, WHO IS IN THAT SITUATION RIGHT NOW

Right now, the roads are still too icy to drive on, and the wind speed is twenty miles per hour. Cats don't know how long this storm will last, but all share the hope that this storm ends soon, so the groceries can get back in stock, so they can get new heaters, and so a kitten can go outside without having to sneak out.

Subscribe again for the end of this storm!

Image above - Rudy, who turns her heater off at night so that it won't strain too much.