
CATS ILLUSTRATED

The snow and ice near Pawsville is melting!

As temperatures have now risen above freezing, the snow and ice near Pawsville is melting. In a day, trucks carrying food restocks will start coming to Pawsville, and there will surely be a rush when the grocery store and the local restaurants have supplies again.

Image above - Harvey, who can't wait to get a restock on sugar cubes.

Kittens are disappointed that the snow is melting, because they had been hoping to get a little more skiing in. It is likely that this was the last big winter storm, and now there might only be a shower of snow every now and then. However, kittens are happy that soda, chips, and other junk food will be in stock at the convenience store when the restock comes. When Lunch's Luncheon's restock truck arrives, Harvey can look forward to some fresh sugar cubes, as Lunch's Luncheon orders the sugar cubes in bulk, because it would be hard for Harvey to get that many sugar cubes efficiently on a regular basis.

Cats are breathing sighs of relief that this storm is over, because many heaters broke down in the storm, leaving cats cold and shivering with all the blankets in their house wrapped around themselves. The heater company has already sent multiple teams to Pawsville, who will hopefully arrive later today and early tomorrow. Harvey called the company first, so the first team to come will go to him, but other cats are scrambling to lock up the second, third, and fourth positions for aid. But all in all, cats just want their heaters fixed, because you can't live comfortably in a house that stays the temperature of a refrigerator.

Now that winds have died down, adult cats are letting their kittens go outside and play. The snow left on the ground is perfect for snowballs, which gives kittens something fun to do for the moment. However, Rudy and Judy have noticed the snowball-friendly snow, and they have been stockpiling snowballs as well. You could tell that this would be a pretty large fight when Rudy chucked a snowball through Judy's open window, causing a cat inside the house to scream.

“I’m going to throw a snowball so hard that it’ll go right through Rudy’s window!”

- JUDY, WHO COULD PROBABLY THROW A SNOWBALL HARD ENOUGH TO BREAK GLASS

Cats are very relieved that this storm is over, because now life will be a bit more relaxed, at least for a little bit. Heaters will be running again soon, and as they say, warm cats are happy cats. It's a very true statement, and cats like Mavis, Juliet, and Naya, who lost their heating during the storm, are going to crank up the heat to eighty degrees, just to warm up. Harvey, Makenna, Smoke, and Reposado were lucky to have Harvey's heated therapy office, but North will be looking forward to a warm house.

Subscribe again for a snowball fight!

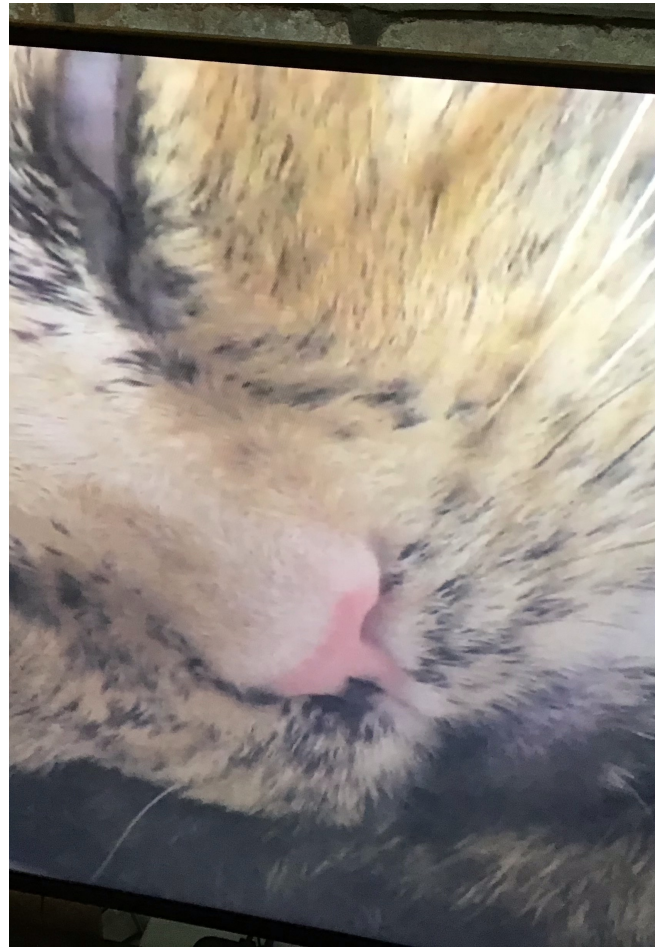

Image above - Judy, who was struck by a wet snowball during her nap.