
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Cats are donating money to The Wish for Fish!

As they want to help out the owner of The Wish for Fish, who has cancer, cats have been donating some money to their cause. They also want The Wish for Fish to stay open, because it's a great restaurant.

Image above - Harvey, who definitely plans to donate.

The owner of The Wish for Fish has accepted this offer, and they understand that cats do want it to stay open, and that might even be the sole reason that they are donating. Taco caT is not happy, because if The Wish for Fish reopens, they will get a lot less business. That's probably for the better, because there isn't a way to tell if "mystery meat" tacos are healthy or not. Many cats have been donating, and it looks like The Wish for Fish may not have to close permanently after all. Just now, The Wish for Fish has paid their overdue rent, and has called for their next restock. Also, now that their boss is being taken care of, the employees were not working nervously, which meant that the food would be high quality.

Just today, The Wish for Fish opened for lunch. They should have put a cat limit in, because even kittens came streaming out of school just to get a fish sandwich for lunch. However, there is a two-hour wait right now, and kittens had to pay twenty dollars each to get a fish sandwich from Naya, who had gone in early and bought a bunch. But to kittens, that was totally worth it, and Naya is thinking about whether she should up her prices. The Wish for Fish is nearly out of stock of just about everything, and they closed just an hour after they opened, a week's worth of food gone.

Many cats are enjoying fish sandwiches, fish sticks, or fish and chips right now, as almost every cat in Pawsville came to The Wish for Fish for lunch. In fact, most of the cats waiting were cats who wanted another fish sandwich or another plate of fish and chips. Naya was the only one who thought to buy bulk, but all of that is gone now as Naya sold most of the fish sandwiches to kittens, then ate the rest herself. I mean, even thieves like The Wish for Fish!

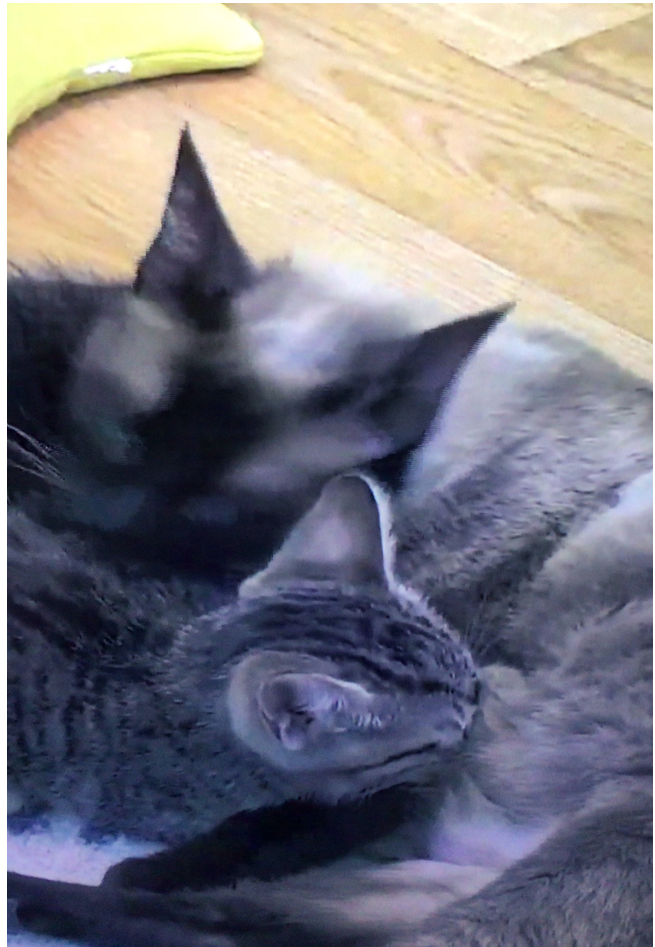

Image above - Lunch, whose luncheon had three customers during Lunchtime.

“You just added the word “popularity” after “The Wish for Fish,” in the last line, which was from yesterday!”

- NAYA, WHO WANTS US TO COME UP WITH NEW STUFF

Taco caT is now very annoyed. Even their regular cats aren't showing up anymore. During lunchtime, no cats showed up, and dinner will probably be a similar story. Cats will be at home, remembering the lovely taste of a fish sandwich or fish and chips. No cat will want to leave for takeout, and maybe dinner will even be forgotten about. Even we are relieved that The Wish for Fish is back open. Even though we haven't gotten any food from it yet.

Subscribe again for more on The Wish for Fish's popularity!