Harvey is holding wrestling classes!

As he is pretty much retired as a wrestler, Harvey has decided that he wants to pass down his skills to the new generation. He is holding wrestling classes in his backyard, and kittens are very excited to go to them.

Mavis, who is also a wrestler, has basically abandoned the sport. Her religious practices take most of her time these days, and to her, wrestling is just something you see on TV. However, Mavis's kittens have gotten the idea in their heads that they have "wrestling blood," and that they were destined to uphold their mama's legacy and become champions of the wrestling world. Mavis's kittens will definitely be attending Harvey's first class, and they will be ready to wrestle anything and anyone. But kittens may not be wrestling in the first class, or even the first few. Harvey has checked out a lot of books on the history of wrestling from the library, and he also was busy buying complimentary sugar cubes to serve at the class.

That being said, kittens are still very interested in this class. They know they will get to wrestle each other eventually, if they aren't impatient. The first class is being held right now, and thirty-or-so kittens showed up to it. Harvey expected a large turnout, but a large turnout to Harvey would have been a dozen kittens. However, Harvey is extremely happy that this many kittens are interested in learning wrestling. But Harvey knows that he can't teach thirty kittens easily, and some will have to go. Harvey has decided to hold quick brawls between kittens, and then Harvey will take the fifteen winners and see which ones can do the most push-ups, eliminating the bottom five in the process.

This will certainly be more interesting than learning about the history of wrestling, and kittens are pumped up. However, they aren't thinking about the one-in-three odds that you won't get into the class, only about what they would learn about and what they would get to do if they did get in. The brawls have started, and the eliminated kittens are not being good sports. But that is that, and Harvey is ushering them out of his yard.

were Lunch's kittens, one was Juliet's kitten, and the last one was one of Naya's kittens.
