
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Naya's kittens have started stealing!

Whether it is due to boredom, or influence the influence of their mama, Naya's kittens have started stealing. They are some of the only kittens who are staying home during spring break, but they are making the most of it. Naya's kittens can buy anything they want from the convenience store, usually with money they have stolen from the houses of other cats.

Image above - Juliet, who is glad that she is not in Pawsville right now.

The remaining cats in Pawsville are worried that if they go on a trip, their houses will be robbed. Naya's kittens aren't that picky, either, as they have robbed the houses of their friends. But right now, many cats are turning to Naya for an answer. If her kittens have gone rogue and are stealing, she is the one who needs to put a stop to it. But the problem is, Naya is encouraging her kittens to steal, and she stealing along with them.

There are still some other kittens left in Pawsville, like Judy's kittens, but they are older and would rather stay away from Naya's kittens. The only place that Naya's kittens really go to hang out at is Harvey's house, where they know they can get free candy, sugar cubes, and a good story. But Harvey is starting to get paranoid that Naya's kittens are stealing something every time they come over, and he doesn't know how much longer he wants to let them into his house. But even Naya's kittens have boundaries. They may steal from the houses of their friends, but stealing from Harvey is out of bounds. However, Harvey doesn't know this, and he is still scared that he'll wake up and his house will have been looted.

Some adult cats have tried approaching Naya's kittens to talk to them about why they have been stealing, but that has not gone well. Twice, Naya's kittens tackled the cat onto the grass and stole their wallet, and one other time they charged straight at the cat, but then veered away after swiping their necklace. No adult cat is in any hurry to approach Naya's kittens right now, and for good reason. Still, cats need to know why kittens are stealing, and Naya's kittens were booked a therapy session with Harvey.

“I can't wait for my kittens to start robbing banks!”

- NAYA

them in. However, they did not promise that they would stop stealing, which is unfortunate.

Subscribe again for more stealing!

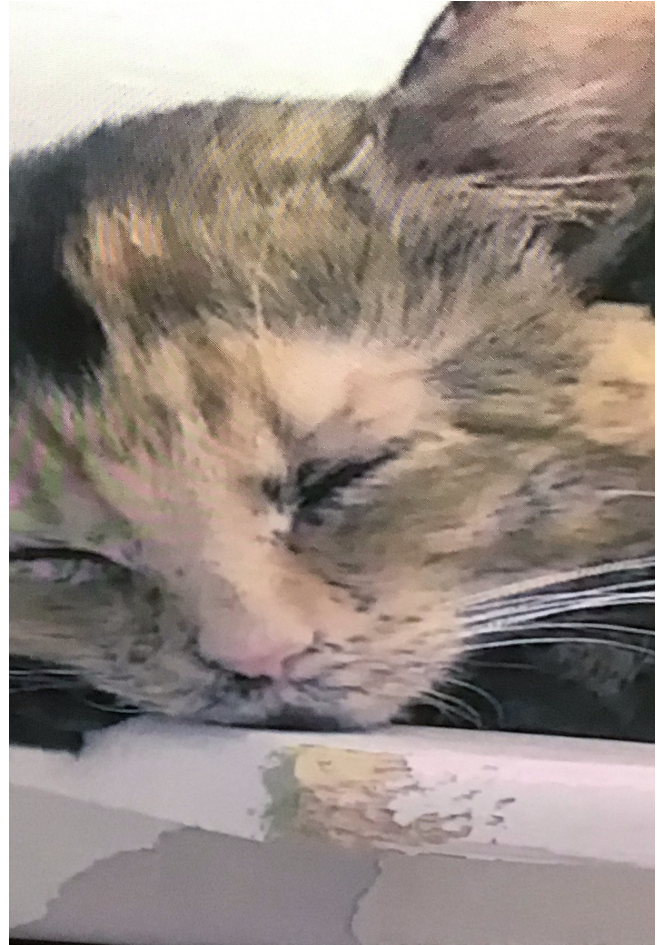

Image above - Judy, who has a baseball bat ready in case Naya's kittens try to steal from her house.

Naya's kittens have confided in Harvey that they feel pressured to be thieves, as their mama is one and she wants her kittens to become thieves as well. Harvey is listening carefully, and he has told Naya's kittens that it isn't bad to stand up for themselves. These are very wise words, and Naya's kittens have taken