Cats are concerned about the quality of Taco caT's food!

After getting a really funky-looking “taco” last night from Taco caT, Juliet has started to get concerned about the quality of the restaurant’s food. The mystery meat “tacos” taste strange and they make you wonder what is actually in them, and the “chips” are squishy and oddly flavored.

When cats mentioned the idea of getting an inspector to check out the Taco caT restaurant, the idea was well-supported. Lunch called an inspector, who will be coming in two days to see if Taco caT’s food is up to the quality standards. Taco caT has complained about this, but by law, they have to submit to an inspection if there are multiple complaints about the quality of their food. Now most cats are satisfied, as Taco caT will probably get the judgement that it deserves. But not all cats are happy about this inspection. Judy's kittens are actually against it.

"I don't think Taco caT needs to be inspected," says Ice, one of Judy's kittens, "it is perfectly good how it is. I love biting into a mystery meat "taco" and trying to guess what kind of meat is in it! I've learned that there are different kinds of "meat" throughout the week, and it's always fun to try a new one!" However, this has made cats even more skeptical of Taco caT, as this means that the mystery meat "tacos" don't have the same meat each time. And by the number of different tastes that Ice has described, cats have realized that Taco caT may not just be serving regular meat like beef and chicken.

Taco caT's restaurant isn't in the best shape, either. The first "T" is leaning sideways, and the parking lot looks like it hasn't been paved since Taco caT opened. The bathrooms are not very well maintained, and the food ... Well, you have to try it to understand why cats are against it so much. We won't describe it, so you don't get an upset stomach. But still, some cats are realizing how surprising it is that Taco caT is still open, as it has so many flaws. Maybe that's why they opened in Pawsville, because it was farther away from inspectors?

"The only year Taco caT passed the test, I stole the paper for myself."

Right now, cats are just waiting for the inspector to come to Pawsville and inspect the Taco caT establishment. There is a very good chance that this Taco caT might have to close, because it definitely has some flaws. It also hasn't been posting its yearly inspection results on the front of the restaurant, and some cats are starting to think that it didn't pass, or was
