
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Stripy's documentary is having some problems!

Though it seemed like an easy decision to make a documentary, the process that you go through to make one is not easy. Stripy is coming to terms with this right now, as she has encountered a few bumps already. However, she is still determined to make this, no matter how much sweat and blood it costs her.

Image above - Rudy, who is curious to know what these problems are.

One issue that came up right away was paying the film crew. They supported the documentary, but not enough so that they would work for free. In the end, Stripy made an agreement where she would pay them half the money up front right now, and the rest when the documentary had been made. The film crew agreed to this, and Stripy has just given them their first payment. But that wasn't the only problem that came up. The documentary would be filmed mostly in Stripy's house, and that would be where the equipment would stay overnight. That meant Stripy and her kittens would have to find a different place to live temporarily, which would be a challenge.

However, the problems did not end there. Stripy would have to pay for lodging for all of the film crew, and find a caterer. This alone would take a lot of time and money, and Stripy is starting to have second thoughts about this documentary. But unless something very large reveals itself, Stripy is going to continue trying to make it. Her kittens are still supporting the documentary too, but only because they know that they'll get famous by being in it. Other than that, they don't care too much. But other adult cats may care. Naya, in a great show of vulnerability, said openly that she would miss making casserole with Stripy, as making the documentary would take up all of Stripy's free time. Stripy has taken this into account, and is thinking about her schedule.

While this documentary is causing problems, there will also be good things that come from it, too. Stripy's casserole business will get more recognition, and therefore, more customers.

“We want to stay at Lunch’s kittens’ house because they get free sugar fries!”

- STRIPY’S KITTENS

Even though this documentary may be more complicated to make than meets the eye, hopefully it will turn out wonderfully when it is finished. But for now, Stripy is going to have to pay for lodging, catering, and filming before she can earn anything.

Subscribe again for more documentary problems!

Image above - Harvey, who doesn't want to miss eating casseroles Stripy makes for him.

Cats all around will get to appreciate the story of how Stripy makes her living by making casseroles, which is a very heartfelt story. Of course, if the documentary does well, Stripy will earn money because of it, but that feels like a side benefit compared to everything else.