
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Pawsville has set a curfew for kittens!

In recent times, there has been an increasing amount of crime in Pawsville. To solve that issue, there has been a curfew set that makes sure all kittens are inside their houses by 10:00 P.M. every night, unless an adult cat is accompanying them. Adult cats are happy that there is finally a curfew enforced by law, but kittens are disappointed at this loss of freedom.

Image above - Lunch, who's glad that there is finally a curfew by law.

Juliet is one of the biggest supporters of this new curfew. "Finally, parents can just relax, knowing that their kittens are in their house past 10:00 P.M. every night legally," says Juliet, "I think that this curfew is a good counter to kittens' late-night shenanigans. My kittens already have a curfew, but now they have to abide by it, as otherwise they would be breaking the law!” However, Naya disagrees. “Kittens deserve freedom,” she says, “I don’t want my kittens to be forced back into the house if the clock strikes 10:00!” Naya is one of the only cats who has this opinion, but it’s important to see an issue from all sides.

Kittens have their own opinions about this new curfew. “I think that this curfew is a great idea,” says Rice, one of Rudy’s kittens, “now we can practice two things at once, stealing beer late at night and breaking the law!” This statement has shocked adult cats, but then again, we’re surprised they didn’t suspect something like this sooner. But Stripy’s kittens have a different approach. “I’m grateful for this new curfew,” says Stripy Jr., “I think that it can provide a schedule and a reasonable boundary for kittens’ lives.” You would think that this is a good statement to the ears of adult cats, if you didn’t hear Stripy’s kittens telling Lunch’s kittens that if adult cats feel secure, they won’t suspect anything is going on.

So far, Stripy Jr.’s method has had the best success. Other kittens have tried similar things, but nothing too alike. But Rice and Rudy’s kittens have had no such success. Rudy supports the curfew, and when she heard Rice speak out against the curfew and talk about breaking the law openly, she put him in therapy and is working on boarding up the windows of her kittens’ room. Sometimes it’s better not to speak your thoughts, and we’re sure Rice is thinking about that right now.

This curfew has caused a stir among cats, and whether it is good or bad, it depends on which cat you hear the story from. Of course, we at Cats Illustrated do our best to stay neutral in any topic of debate (go curfew). Or not.

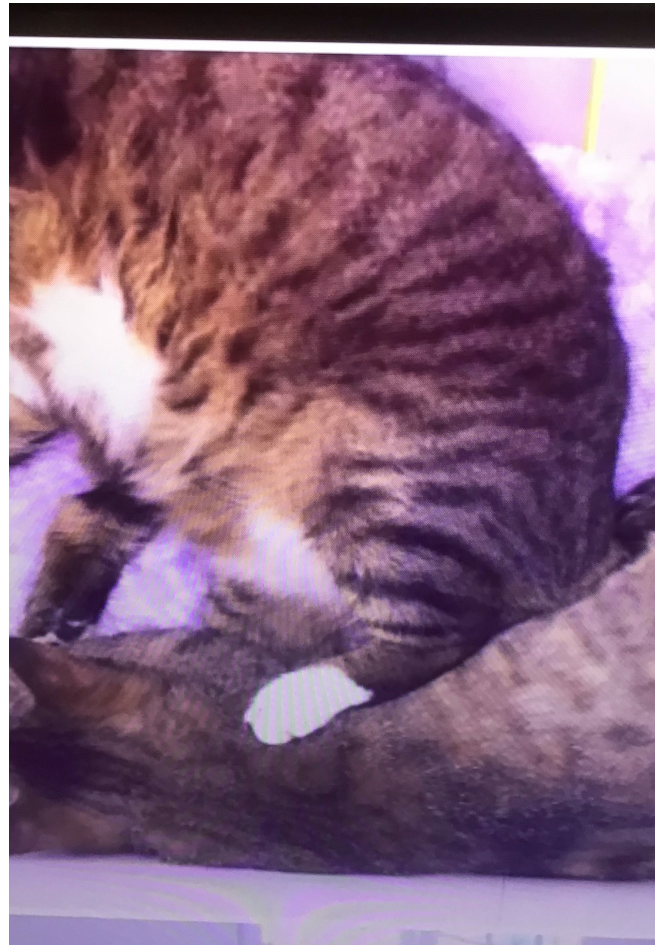

Image above - Harvey, telling North about how he didn’t have any curfews when he was a kitten.

“We told Mavis that the curfew was made by sinners, and she’s telling us to disobey it.”

- MAVIS’S KITTENS, WHO FOUND THE CREATIVE SOLUTION

Subscribe again for more on this new curfew!