
CATS ILLUSTRATED

The school is bringing back their detention program!

As they do want a way to give punishment out, the school in Pawsville has decided to bring back their detention program. Parent cats are happy that they were notified before the decision was made, but kittens are horrified. They live for goofing off in school, and no kitten wants detention. This is startling, as the decision was brought up and pushed through in a matter of a few days.

Image above - Lunch, who's happy that she was notified about it this time.

Some cats support this program, while others don't. "I think that this detention program will whip kittens into shape," says Naya, "they need to learn how to respect their elders. This program will do wonders for kittens, especially their manners!” Most cats agree with Naya, but some don’t. “I want to devise my own punishments for my kittens,” says Juliet, “if my kittens are misbehaving, I want to be the one to give them a punishment. It isn’t the school’s job.” Juliet also has some support, and this is turning into a heated debate.

Kittens are trying to win over the support of their mamas right now, and Juliet has gotten surprise hugs and free fur-brushing. She is already against the detention program, but her kittens want her to act rashly. However, other kittens have other ideas. Rudy also doesn’t support the detention program, and so today at school, her kittens made a big scene in front of the school at lunch, and got put in detention. When Rudy came to pick them up, her fake-crying kittens rushed to her, telling their mama about how horrible detention was, and they were put in it because one of their teachers didn’t like them and wanted to punish them for no reason (not true, but Rudy didn’t pry). Rudy didn’t even notice when her kittens shot sly grins at the principal, who happened to be walking by. This has caused a fuss, but the school is not backing down on the issue of this detention program.

Image above - Judy, whose kittens are too old for detention.

“I got into detention all the time when I was a kitten!”

- HARVEY, WHO’S PROUD OF IT NOW

Mavis’s kittens are in a tough situation. Because Juliet was against the detention program, their mama was all for it. However, Mavis’s kittens do not support the program. But they also want to support their mama. And in the end, they decided to support their mama. Today, they went to a meeting of detention-hating kittens, listened in, and then gave the information to their mama and the principal. The school rewarded Mavis’s kittens with snacks, and they will be happy to do more spying now. But this issue is still not resolved, and there will probably be some more two-faceted kittens and betrayal. It will be very interesting to write about, and people will pay well to read this story.

Subscribe again for more on detention protests!