
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Lunch is traveling to escape the heat!

As she is allergic to mosquitos, and is not doing well in the heat, Lunch is going to travel away from Pawsville, at least for a short time. She will be renting a camper to travel in, and Jake and her kittens will accompany her on this trip.

Image above - Lunch, who cannot stand the temperature.

Other kittens are very jealous that Lunch's kittens are getting to go away from Pawsville, and they are trying to find ways that they can tag along. Parent cats have put a stop to these efforts though, and it looks like kittens will have to suck it up and stay in the heat. But Lunch's idea has gotten parent cats thinking. It would be very nice to travel away just for a little bit, and Juliet is considering a short vacation as well. Kittens supported this, until they found out that adult cats were planning just to take the vacation themselves.

The mosquitos are still at large right now, but the temperature will be going down into the seventies by next week. However, kittens have gotten enough bites to make them stay in their rooms all day, with the windows boarded up and a towel blocking the crack under the door. Yesterday, Wilbur Spots wasn't being careful and left the front door open, letting mosquitos into Juliet's house. Now he and his sibilings are staying in their room, with their stashes of candy and some canned food. Stripy left her window open last night, and some mosquitos got in. Somehow, one got into a casserole she had made the day before, and Stripy discovered it just before it was too late.

Even Naya is being affected by this, and she is not stealing as much as usual. However, she has set up a market for mosquitoes, and is selling jars of them to cats for five dollars each. Kittens are enjoying opening the door to their parents' room, smashing a jar of mosquitoes on the ground, closing the door, and waiting for the screams to start. But that isn't all. Mavis paid off Juliet's kittens to leave their mama's window open, and Mavis's kittens lobbed in a jar of mosquitos. It was a success for Mavis, but also a loss, because she paid Juliet's kittens in precious cabbage ice cream.

“The days of bombs are over. Jars of mosquitoes are the future!”

- MAVIS'S KITTENS

having to worry about mosquitos, which was a very big hit with kittens and adult cats alike.

Subscribe again for more on ice cream!

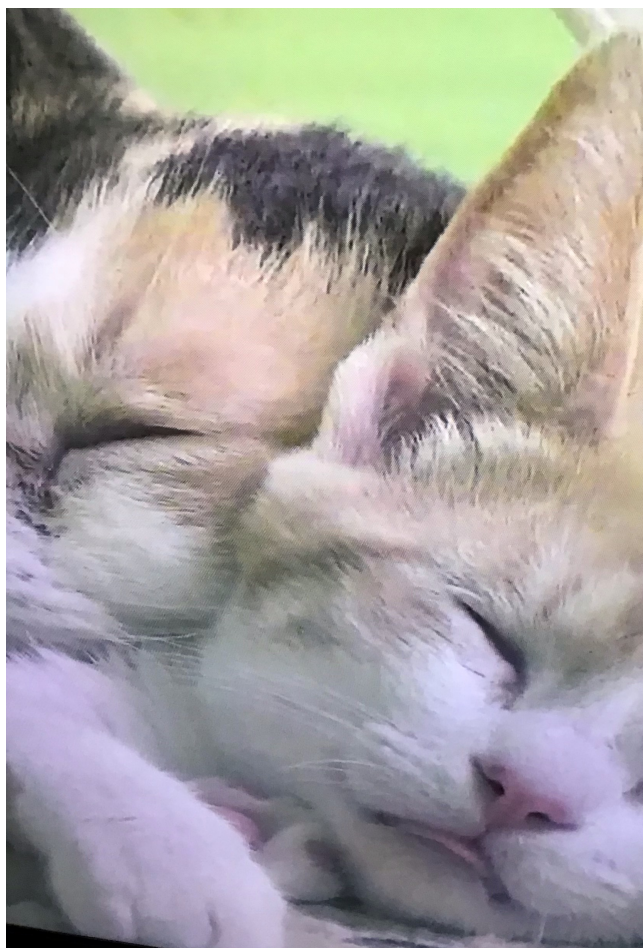

Image above - Rudy, who is also thinking about traveling away for a little bit.

Speaking of ice cream, Rebecca's ice cream shop has been booming with business. Every single flavor was sold out yesterday, even cabbage. To increase business even more, Rebecca has even put a bug screen around her patio so cats can eat their ice cream without