
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Mavis's kittens are selling lemonade!

As they want a way to make quick money, Mavis's kittens have been selling lemonade. Cats along with bugs have swarmed their stand, and Mavis's kittens have been hard at work making more lemonade. They are also earning a sizable profit, and Mavis's kittens are starting to think long-term for their new business.

Image above - Juliet, who would kill for a cold glass of lemonade right now.

While some cats support Mavis's kittens, others think that they are cheating cats with high prices when they know that cats would do anything for a cold drink right now. "I think that this lemonade stand is a great idea," says Naya, "and if Mavis's kittens are cheating other cats, I think it's even better! It can provide a valuable lesson for Mavis's kittens, in the category of deceit and trickery!" With this argument, Naya does not have that much support, unlike Stripy. "I think that Mavis's kittens are charging too much for lemonade because they know cats will buy it," says Stripy, "I think it's a really bad way to get money, and it should be stopped at once." While some cats are shocked at Stripy's reaction, others are with her all the way.

Mavis's kittens have given other kittens ideas, and soon, there were all kinds of drink stands springing up outside houses. Rudy's kittens have started selling soda, which sold very fast. Juliet's kittens were not able to find any good drinks in their fridge, and they are selling water. They have gotten very little business, and the only cats who bought any water just dumped it on themselves to stay cool. However, while Juliet's kittens tried to think of ways to make their water seem like a better thing to buy, Mavis's kittens and Rudy's kittens competed to sell the most drinks. Mavis's kittens were winning, but only because their stand looked more professional. But Rudy did not want her kittens to be bested by Mavis's kittens, and she has given her kittens more money to renovate their shop. This is turning into a battle of sorts, and anything could happen.

Image above - Judy, who isn't going to take a side in this matter.

"I buy drinks from both parties, because I don't want this fight to die down."

- NAYA

According to the weather forecast, the temperature should cool down in the next day or so. The fight to corner the cool drinks market may be put on hold, and cats will just relish the feeling of cooler temperatures. But we suspect that this fight over cold drinks might not die down, as each seller will not back down for the other, even temporarily. Mavis's kittens are starting to think about bottling their lemonade, and Rudy's kittens are designing a soda of their own, which they may sell instead of other brand soda.

Subscribe again for more on drink fights!