
CATS ILLUSTRATED

A new club is opening up in Pawsville!

To shake things up in Pawsville, Naya has decided to open an exclusive club. It meets at night, and inside, cats can drink, play pool, and have fun with each other. However, Naya is planning on making the club very exclusive, and the rule is you have to commit a crime in order to enter.

Image above - Judy, who would like it very much to get into this club.

Many parent cats in Pawsville are curious about this club, but they don't want to show it. Kittens are also curious, but adult cats have passed it off as a book club so kittens don't get too interested. However, if kittens dig for information, they will soon find out that this club is not centered around books. Adult cats also don't want kittens to try and get into the club by committing a crime and then drinking once they were inside. That would be two crimes, which is the opposite of what parent cats want for their kittens. But word is traveling fast and adult cats should hurry to fill the spots before kittens get there first.

The first cat who joined was Mavis, who spray painted a bad word on the wall of the school. Naya looked it over, and approved. It was a crime that the school would think kittens had committed, which made it almost impossible to track the crime to Mavis. She plans to go to the club tonight, and she has brought back some valuable information for her kittens. There is no age minimum, which means any cat can get in if they commit a crime. Right now, Mavis's kittens are plotting their next move, which will probably be criminal. Other kittens have gotten similar information, and they are thinking of what crime would be good enough for Naya to let them into the club.

Even some cats who usually follow the rules are getting into the criminal mindset. Juliet, clad in black, raided the convenience store, knocking over a shelf in the process. Naya definitely let her in, and she is very happy at the turnout that her club is getting. It may even be full on the first night, which would be very cool. However, Naya is fair, and she wants other cats to get turns in the club, too. So, every week, the club's members will be kicked out and they will have to fight for a spot again, along with cats who didn't get in the first time.

“Does sneaking snacks count as a crime?”

- WILBUR SPOTS

Cats are committing crimes as we speak, and new spots are being decided in Naya's club. Some kittens have gotten in, which adult cats have not found out about yet. However, when Juliet goes to the club tonight and sees her kittens there, she may commit another crime when they get home, drunk and tired.

Subscribe again for more on this exclusive club!

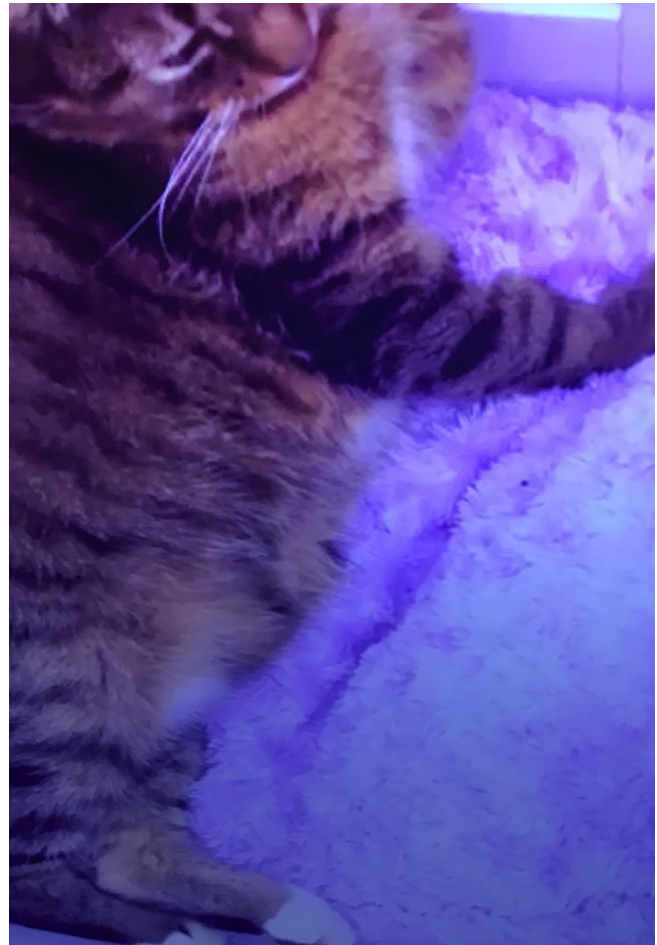

Image above - Harvey, who is also thinking about becoming a criminal to get into Naya's club.