Kittens are excited for the end of the school year!

As it is coming up in less than a month, kittens are very excited for summer break. However, this excitement has caused problems for adult cats and teachers alike.

Kittens have become so wrapped up in pre-summer preparations that they are simply forgetting to do their homework. While that usually isn't the case in most situations, it is the truth in this one. Teachers are not happy about this, and they are asking adult cats to make sure their kittens do their homework. However, even adult cats are not trustworthy. Juliet accepted a payoff from her kittens yesterday to "forget" about her task, and Naya turned a blind eye toward her kittens after they promised to steal their mama a wallet. This has just made school administrators even angrier, as there isn't a good way to enforce homework any harder.

Kittens have been thinking and talking about what things they want to do over the summer, and by now they have come up with three things. Eat junk food, relax, and play video games. And while adult cats wish that their kittens would do something more active, they themselves might just sit around all day watching TV. This would be Harvey's agenda, if he wasn't using the summer to move. North plans to get as much relaxing done as possible, and he is even contemplating lying to his boss about how Harvey was sick and North needed to take care of him. This would work out well for both Harvey and North, as Harvey would have an excuse to lie around all day and eat casseroles and cookies delivered by pitying cats. North would get a break from work, so he could do the same thing as Harvey.

Lunch is thinking about changing the hours of her luncheon, from all day to set periods within the day. There is not much of a breakfast menu anymore, with all of the menu changes, so Lunch is considering only opening for lunch and dinner instead of the whole day.

That way, there would only be one regular length shift instead of two small ones, and more employees wouldn't have to work.

"Who knew the chairs at school were so sleep-inducing?"

Cats are ready for summer to come and sweep them up into the wonderful world of no school and therefore less work. In Pawsville, even the bosses know that their workers like to have breaks, and therefore there is not as much work in the summer, so adult cats can spend time with their kittens. Though usually, adult cats use the free time to relax and sleep.
