

CATS ILLUSTRATED

Cats have been introduced to popcorn!

As there is a new drive-in movie theater being built in Pawsville, cats have been introduced to some new types of snacks. Today, Juliet was scoping out the area where the drive-in movie theater would be, and she happened to run into one of the developers. And when Juliet asked what kinds of snacks would be served at the drive-in movie theater, the only thing that Juliet didn't recognize was popcorn.

You may be skeptical that cats have never tried popcorn before, but it is true. You'd be surprised about how much cats eat potato chips, which has been the substitute for popcorn for years, it seems. However, cats are curious about popcorn, and there is a variety of opinions on it. “I don’t think popcorn will taste good at all,” says Lunch’s kittens, “it’s just popped corn, which is a vegetable!” Many kittens agree with Lunch’s kittens, but Juliet disagrees. “If they serve popcorn in a movie theater, it has to be junky! I want to keep my kittens away from popcorn!”

Image above - Rudy, who never thought vegetables could make such tasty snacks.

Many parent cats are concerned about popcorn, though they are finding strange results when they look it up. Popcorn is actually pretty healthy, it seems, and it doesn’t taste at all like corn. Kittens are curious about it now, as it could be a snack that their parents would let them have on a regular basis. And then parent cats read about what made it taste good. Oil and salt and butter were the main things, though some movie theaters used fake butter on their popcorn. This has made parent cats wary all over again, but kittens are very intrigued now. However, now that cats know about popcorn, they are starting to notice things that they never did before. Last year at the county fair, there were many popcorn stands. At the time, cats thought that popcorn was some exotic treat that you could only get at county fairs. But popcorn would also explain the purpose of some weird gadgets in the hardware store, as those gadgets could be popcorn makers.

Image above - Lunch, who supports her kittens' snacking if they are eating popcorn.

“Finally! A tasty snack that I can eat a lot of with North’s approval!”

- HARVEY, WHO’S BEEN WAITING FOR THIS MOMENT

The grocery store has noticed this fad for popcorn, and they have called their supervisors to ask if they get popcorn in their next restock, as it could be super popular. However, this may benefit Naya more than it does the grocery store. By the time that the restock is unloaded, half of the popcorn will probably be gone and Naya will most likely have already started selling it off to cats. Or, there might be a security guard waiting in the restock truck to fend off any efforts to steal any popcorn. While most cats hope that Naya gets caught, she would probably get away, in either situation.

Subscribe again for more on popcorn!