

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Cats have been buying portable fans recently!

As the temperatures in Pawsville are too high for the likes of most cats, they have been buying a lot of portable fans recently. Why not stay cool wherever you go?

This new demand for portable fans is causing some problems, though. When they are out shopping, cats are so focused on their portable fans that they don't even notice when they bump into another cat. There have already been several incidents where something important gets spilled or broken and two cats have to be broken apart from a pawfight. However, portable fans are helping cats deal with the heat, and they aren't going to stop using them anytime soon, no matter how much trouble the fans get them in. But when kittens proposed the idea of getting themselves portable fans, adult cats had different reactions.

Image above - Harvey, who has come to rely on portable fans during outings.

---

“I think that kittens should not be allowed to have their own portable fans,” says Juliet, “it would cost a lot to get a fan for each of my six kittens. However, I would be willing to get one if my kittens shared it.” Juliet’s kittens do not want to share a fan, and they are opposed to their mama’s idea. However, Stripy has a different idea. “I only have three kittens, so the expense of getting a fan for each of them wouldn’t be that much. I think it would be a great idea, and it might help my kittens do their best in school!” Many kittens have told their parents that a personal fan would help them stay focused in school, but no parent cats have caved yet. Stripy’s kittens are gloating about their new fans coming in the mail, which is not helping.

While they are interested in portable fans right now, cats have also been thinking about summer plans. But right now, most cats can only think of things they don’t like and what they don’t want to do. Mavis’s kittens would run away before they went through another eight-hour ritual, Rudy would need to bring more bug spray than water if she had to go camping, which would not be fun, and Juliet hopes she never sees the inside of another dingy hotel in the city.

“If we commit a sin will we not be allowed to go to the religious gathering?”

- MAVIS’S KITTENS, WHO MAY HAVE FOUND A WAY OUT

wants to go to another one to see if her fate will be revealed and her path in life will be set.

Subscribe again for more on portable fans and summer plans!

Image above - Juliet, who actually believed that city hotels would be nice.

Right now, cats are getting good use out of their portable fans, and planning for the summer. Most cats want to go somewhere to escape the heat, and Lunch is thinking of going up far north to see snow in the middle of summer. Unfortunately for her kittens, Mavis was not able to see her destiny the last time she attended a religious gathering, and she