
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Parent cats have enrolled their kittens in summer camp!

As they want their kittens to stay enriched over the summer months, parent cats have enrolled their kittens in a couple of different kinds of summer camps. Lunch put her kittens in a writing class, and Juliet wants her kittens to take a math class to be ready for their next school year.

Image above - Lunch and her kittens, talking over summer camp plans.

However, while most parent cats think that kittens should still be learning during summer break, Rudy believes strongly that kittens shouldn't be in school for the whole year. She has let her kittens pick any kind of class they want to take, as long as they take a class. This wasn't hard, and Rudy's kittens have enrolled themselves in a class for refining video game reflexes.

Many kittens are jealous of Rudy's kittens, as they would much rather be in a class where you can play video games and pass it off as work instead of an advanced math or writing class.

Summer camp will be starting near the end of June, and most parent cats are not planning to travel until then. That means that most travel will not happen until late July or August, which has made most kittens hate their summer camps even more. However, parent cats are not going to let their kittens weasel out of this situation, no matter how many bags of potato chips go missing. Some kittens have accepted defeat, and they are trying to see the bright side in the situation. At least they aren't taking a month-long class, only one that will last two weeks. But still kittens would rather not take these classes than take them.

Naya's kittens, seeing an opportunity to make some money, have offered an interesting proposition. Their mama is not making them take any summer classes, but Naya's kittens are not looking forward to staying home, either. They have offered to go in place of kittens, for one hundred dollars every kitten replaced. This is a very tempting offer, though most kittens do not have enough money to pay for it. Naya's kittens are disappointed, but they have not lowered their price. They're having second thoughts about their business. It wouldn't be fun to go to a boring school camp for two weeks, even if you were paid well for it.

“Maybe we can find a way to scrape together money to pay Naya's kittens.”

- MAVIS'S KITTENS, LOOKING FOR A WAY OUT and kittens put in math classes are feeling good about the things that they are enrolled in.

Subscribe again for more on summer camp!

Image above - Juliet, who loves this time of year as she gets her house to herself while her kittens are at summer camp.