

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Kittens are officially out of school!

As of this afternoon, kittens have been formally dismissed from school. They are extremely happy, and right now, kittens all over Pawsville are frolicking in the streets.

However, kittens are also realizing that they don't really have anything to do. There won't be any trips until after summer camp is over, and that means that kittens will just have to wait a few weeks until things start to happen. This is disappointing, and many kittens have found themselves feeling sadder than they were before school was let out. Adult cats are the opposites. Most adult cats have been given a break off work, and they are relishing the freedom. North turned a blind eye when Harvey stole his soda just because he felt good, and Rudy didn't care when her kittens raided the pantry for snacks. Right now, there is a very good mood in Pawsville.

Image above - Lunch's kittens, telling their mama how happy they are that school is over.

---

Lunch is one of the only cats who is not getting a break from work, as her luncheon is still open. In fact, she has had extra work in the past day. Many cats are coming in for celebratory meals, and that means that she has to cook even more. Lunch is not feeling so good right now, and she is thinking about closing her luncheon on certain days of the week to give herself more time off. Quite a few cats are skeptical at this idea, though Lunch is claiming that it is also going to help the construction workers finish her outdoor patio faster. But there is another problem. The construction workers that Lunch hired to build the patio have walked off the job, claiming that they would not work for a cat whose kittens had fought against them in the battle for Harvey's house (see issues #421-#425). Lunch is very frustrated, and she has been taking it out on her kittens a little bit, making them help out in her luncheon while she sulked about not being able to build her patio.

Image above - Juliet's kittens, who knew that their actions in the battle for Harvey's house would come full circle eventually.

"I understand why the construction workers would want to get back at kittens."

- HARVEY, WHO WITNESSED THE BATTLE FOR HIS HOUSE

This is still a festive time, and kittens have decided to be happy that they don't have to be in school at least. That means no homework, lots more free time, and less supervision. If adult cat are happy and occupied, they won't keep an eye on their kittens. That fact makes this time of year perfect for pranks and tricks.

Summer is just getting started, and there will be lots more fun to come. In fact, the first day of summer break is tomorrow, which also marks a very big occasion. I'm sure you can already guess what it is (look at the issue number), and we can tell you that it will be a day to remember.